Crestline Intersection Set for Improvements

SAN BERNARDINO – The Board of Supervisors awarded a $229,436 contract on Tuesday to make safety improvements to an intersection in Crestline.

The Department of Public Works determined that a slope creates sight issues for drivers at the intersection of Springwater and Thousand Pines roads. In addition, a small turning radius from Springwater Road to Thousand Pines Road makes it difficult for fire trucks, buses and other large vehicles to turn at the intersection.

The project approved by the Board of Supervisors entails adjusting the slope to improve drivers' sight distance at the intersection and widening the turning radius between Springwater and Thousand Pines roads to make turning easier for large vehicles. Minor drainage improvements were also included in the project. Work is scheduled to begin immediately and should be completed in early November. The intersection will remain open during the construction, but drivers should expect some delays.

"This project will enhance public safety by improving drivers' line of sight and by making it easier for fire trucks to navigate the intersection," said Board of Supervisors Chairman Paul Biane, who represents the Crestline communities as the County's Second District Supervisor. "I urge motorists to exercise caution when driving in the construction zone over the next couple of months."
